

EDUCATION

DATA SYSTEMS IN AFRICA

The Pan African Institute for Education for Development (AU IPED) is a specialized institution of the African Union that supports Member States in strengthening education systems, building institutional capacity, and advancing evidence-based policy development.

Through research, policy dialogue, and technical support, AU IPED works with governments, development partners, and education stakeholders to strengthen education planning, data systems, and policy implementation across the continent. Reliable education data systems are essential for planning, budgeting, and improving learning outcomes. Strengthening EMIS enables governments to make informed decisions, monitor education progress, and ensure that no learner is left behind.
